

Junior Journalists

Tea Trader - Question Time

by Alina C. and Amelia K.

DID YOU KNOW that the Tea Trader store in Inglewood has been open since 1994? Their most popular tea is Eight Bells and all the Junior Journalists liked it! It smelled like toffee, ice cream and blueberries...

hood. They get as many as one hundred and five customers a week!

Their most fancy teas are flowering teas as well as a super fancy Oolong tea that smelled fantastic! Their most expensive tea is Wild Purple Bud Puer which costs $65 for 125 grams! Their oldest tea is from 1999 and their coolest colour of tea is the Red Rooibos Hibiscus Tea. Rooibos Tea is a type of naturally caffeine-free, herbal tea made Golden Snail. It is shaped like a bunch of mini snails! Hopefully it tastes better than its name!

Tea Trader is an awesome shop and we think you should definitely check it out if you haven't yet! :)

The JJ team, with Kate Lucyk and Ted Jones and a LOT of tea!

mmm! There are no other Tea Trader locations around Calgary and it's in Inglewood because the owner of the store lives right here in the neighbourhood from the leaves of the South African Rooibos bush.

The owner's favourite tea is called Castleton. Their weirdest tea is called

You can find out more about Tea Trader here <https://teatradr.com/>

It's not just the tea - the tea pots are amazing too!

Tea tasting time - Immy looks totally blissed out

Tea Trader Fast Facts & Numbers

$65

The price for 125 grams of the most expensive tea (that does make about 40 cups though!)

5

The number of continents that the teas come from 1,500

The amount (in lbs) of tea in the shop

1991

The year initial sales started

20

The age of the oldest tea

150

The number of different teas there are for sale

Did you know...

Tea Trader opened its doors in Inglewood in 1994, and moved into its current location in 2007

ACS DramAntics Does it Again!

by Kim Firmston

TVTV – WHAT Could Possibly Go Wrong?', the latest production from the Alexandra Centre Society DramAnt'ics Kids' Theatre Camp, hit the stage during the Inglewood SunFest as part of The Calgary Fringe Festival to a sold-out crowd. The play, written by the kids, was about TVTV, a television station that is going bankrupt, causing the staff to go to greater and more extreme levels to get more viewers – making animations come alive, juggling fire, reporting from the top of the Calgary Tower, and finally... cooking blowfish supreme!

For half of the twelve actors (many of whom were our own local kids), it was their first production with the camp, for others it was their first production ever. However, for some kids, it was their sixth, seventh, or eighth play. They just keep coming back!

The confidence the participants get, taking their own ideas and words and putting them on stage, gives them self-reliance which they then take to other areas for their life. Not only that, the camp participants learn writing, acting, set and costume design, promotion, and most of all – how to work effectively in a group, all skills which are easily transferable to school, life, and community.

The kids in this camp worked so hard! The days were long and hot. When they weren't rehearsing, they were painting, building, planning, or helping each other run lines. But it wasn't all nose to the grindstone, they also had water gun fights, blew giant bubbles, had impromptu dance parties, feasted, went for ice cream, and played games in the playground.

The next camp runs during spring break. Be sure to join in the adventure! Contact the Alexandra Centre Society at: info@alexandracentresociety.org for more information.